American and British English differences

Although British English and American English are very similar, there are a few differences of grammar and spelling. Here are some examples of the most important differences.

Use of the simple past and present perfect tenses

In British English, only the present perfect can be used to talk about past actions which have an effect on the present moment. In American English, both simple past and present perfect tenses are possible with similar meanings.

Compare:

He has just gone out. OR He just went out. (US)

Do you have a question? OR Have you got a question? (US)
Have you got a question? (GB)

The past participle form of get

In American English, the past participle form of get is gotten. In British English, it is got.

I haven’t gotten an answer. (US)
I haven’t got an answer. (GB)

Collective nouns

In American English, collective nouns (e.g. committee, team, army, family, jury etc) are always followed by singular verbs. In British English, both singular and plural verbs are possible.

Singular verbs are used when we are talking of the group as a whole. Plural verbs are used when we are talking about individuals within the group.

The committee meets next week. (US)
