Some conversational structures

I’m dying to + (verb)
This structure is used to talk about something that you want or desire to do. It shows impatience or an irresistible urge to do something.

I’m dying to know my test results.
I’m dying to see her again.
I’m dying to buy a bigger car.
I’m dying to see my medical reports.
I’m dying to hear from her.

It’s my / your / his turn to + (verb)
This structure is used to indicate that the responsibility for doing something shifts from one person to another.

It’s your turn to do the dishes. (= You have to do the dishes.)
It’s your turn to make the bed. (= You have to make the bed.)
It’s my turn to do the laundry.
It’s your turn to do the shopping.
It’s your turn to pay for dinner.
It’s her turn to cook dinner.

It’s hard for me to + (verb)
You can use this structure to talk about something that is challenging or difficult for you.

Here are some examples:

It’s hard for me to find a good job.
It’s hard for me to let him go.
It’s hard for me to believe what you are telling me.
It’s hard for me to maintain a good credit history.
It’s hard for me to work under pressure.